<sup>1</sup> While there may be circumstances when a trust could be contested (e.g., fraud, etc.), they are rare in comparison to how a will might be contested.

<sup>2</sup> Assets will only pass outside of the estate (i.e., not subject to estate taxes) if they are held within an irrevocable trust.

<sup>3</sup> A revocable living trust becomes irrevocable upon the grantor's death. At that point, the trust may require a tax return to be filed (depending on the amount and timing of income in the trust).

<sup>4</sup> While some states may consider a self-made will to be legally valid, hiring an attorney is generally recommended to help you draft a proper will.

<sup>5</sup> IRAs and ERISA plans cannot be put in a trust. However, a trust can be listed as the beneficiary of IRAs and ERISA plans.
